

Cooked Alive! “Accidents happen,” is not something the workers of Bumble Bee Foods should say. Although this horrifying and tragic incident happened on October 11, 2012, it’s a gruesome nightmare still lives with people today. Bumble Bee Foods was a factory that tuna fish. Being an ordinary company, the officials had neglected in overlooking its safety conditions. Assuming that everything worked fine, the company went on existing without any problems. That is until one day, when their main oven, which is said to be 35 feet long broke. Naturally, the company’s handyman was called in for the job. And that is when things went absolutely wrong!

According to Fox News, Jose Melena (age 62), was “performing maintenance” on the oven while being inside it. At that moment the company’s worker had no idea the Melena was in there. Apparently, the worker thought that Jose Melena went to the restroom and without any hesitation began doing his job. He filled the oven with 12,000 pounds of tuna and turned it on. After the company noticed that Melena was missing, a search for him opened up. The workers looked everywhere, but could not find him. Little did anyone suspect that inside that oven was a living soul... (continued on the website)

As for the rest of us, this is a lesson to carry out all of our actions more thoroughly. Nothing is accident free, but there are certain things that can help prevent them from happening. Jose Melena died, fulfilling his duties. He is a symbol of a victim to human carelessness. This incident may not be of a common occurrence, but it is terrible enough to remind us about caution. So next time as you sneer at the “Caution: Wet Floor” sign, remember Melena and appreciate the safety provided for you. Let this man’s story serve as a reminder to all of us, and may his soul forever rest in peace. Written by Ekaterina Z. and edited by Rohit M.

Have you ever had this great idea in your head and then you realize, how could I make this? Now you can with the new developments in printing. This new development is called 3-D printing. You design a shape/ creation on your computer and send it to the printer as seen in the picture. It is then produced with a liquid that hardens into plastic and before your eyes, your childish dream of inventing something is now true. This has truly been the greatest advancement in printing probably ever since the printer was even invented over 600 years ago. -Jordan

Natural Disaster of Epic Proportions

WORLDWIDE NEWS

The Earthquake in Nepal that you've probably heard about by now, occurred near the capital of Kathmandu and the city of Pokhara. Nearly 539 people died in this earthquake and more than 1,700 were injured. According to the U.S. Geological Survey, the magnitude of the earthquake was 7.8, which is almost to the top of the scale. (See the image on the website for a reference of a Magnitude Scale). Nepali Information Minister, Minendra Rijal stated, "There had been 'massive damage' at the epicenter, from where little information is emerging." Also, the Dharahara tower (one of Nepal's landmarks) had completely collapsed onto people's houses.

The U.S. is sending in a disaster response team to Nepal and has released an initial 1 million dollars to serve the immediate needs of Nepal.

This is quite a devastating loss that Nepal has experienced. Many Nepalese people reported to the NTV news press of Nepal that they hope this event should never happen anywhere else.

Supervolcano Found Near Yellowstone National Park

Tourists from all over the world come to see this one attraction; Old Faithful every single day. Some Geophysicists say that beneath this beauty is a ticking time bomb: a supervolcano. Geophysicists have been awed with this idea, and now, using the newest technology, they have discovered this extraordinary marvel of nature.

Scientists did know that this volcano existed, but just recently, they have realized the tremendous size of it. Underneath the national park's attractions and walking paths is enough hot rock to fill the Grand Canyon nearly 14 times over! The heat source for this volcano is 440-1800 miles below the Earth's surface; some scientists speculate that the heat source is directly from the core. It alone has a volume 2.5 times that of the Grand Canyon and to put this into perspective, the volcano's volume is about 13,625,000,000,000 (13 Trillion, 625 Billion) cubic yards!

The good news is that there are no new dangers; however, scientists are recording every minuscule movement. This is crucial if we don't want to have another Pompeii incident, and it would be preferred if we could evacuate as many people as possible if such a catastrophe does occur. The Yellowstone is a great national park, and you shouldn't be afraid to go check it out yourself! - Rohit M.

Poem in Your Pocket Day April. To most people, this is the month when bees start buzzing, flowers start blooming, and when the weather finally begins to take a turn for the better. However, besides beginning the beloved season of spring, April is also National Poetry Month. The United States has dedicated this month to celebrating and honoring the numerous poets that have shared their inspiring words. Going along with the month-long celebration, yesterday, April 30th, was Poem in Your Pocket Day, just one of the multitude of days we have in this wonderful month to celebrate poetry.

Poem In Your Pocket Day, or PIYP, as some refer to it, is something anyone can participate in, and is really easy to get involved in. All a person had to do, is print or write down a poem, whether it's their own or one of their favorites, and keep in with them the whole day. They could even simply keep it on their phone if they can't carry a hard copy. Then, people can go around sharing their poem with whomever they choose.

You don't have to memorize the poem, but just keeping it and reading it to people helps share the love and appreciation of poetry, which is what this day is really about. People are even sharing their poems online using the hashtag #pocketpoem. So many groups and communities all over America are joining in to appreciate poetry, doing little things to help spread the word about PIYP Day. They are passing out bookmarks with lines from poems on them, urging local shops to give people carrying poems discounts, and even posting pocket-sized versions of their poems in public places.

It's never too late to join! There is never a bad time to read and write poetry, and you might as well have a great time doing so with thousands of others all across the United States! Spread the word about Poem in Your Pocket Day to whoever you can, and if you didn't get to participate this year, you can always join in next year! Remember, poetry is more than just words... it is a way of expression, escape, and connection. -Jeyda
